DEFEAT OF GERMAN ATTACK ON SOMME FRONT, AND DESPERATE FIGHT AROUND DUNKERQUE ANNOUNCED BY THE FRENCH

Action Along Somme River Increases—"Complete Solidarity" of French and British Forces is Stressed—French Cover British Withdrawal

(By John MacVane, I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

PARIS, June 1—Defeat of a German attack on the Somme River front and desperate fighting around Dunkerque, where units of the British Expeditionary Force in Flanders are embarking for England, were announced by the French high command today.

The communique indicated that action along the Somme River front is increasing. At the same time it stressed the "complete solidarity" of the French and British forces in the Dunkerque area, where the French are covering the British withdrawal.

"French and British land, sea and air forces continue in complete solidarity their desperate fight at Dunkerque, resisting the German onslaught to ensure the evacuation," the communique stated.

"The enemy, showing the importance which he attaches to a crossing of the Somme River, counter-attacked in that region. This counter-attack was repulsed."

Meanwhile, in Paris, all the newspapers gave prominent display to articles stating that Italy is on the eve of intervention in the war and that a definite decision will be reached in Rome on Tuesday, when the Fascist Grand Council is scheduled to meet under chairmanship of Premier Mussolini.

Most of the French headlines stated that Italy had broken off negotiations with the Allies abruptly.

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

LONDON, June 1—Only one division of Allied troops now remains in London today.

Thousands of French troops arrived in English ports during the morning including Colonial forces and French gunners who have been manning heavy artillery in the Ypres sector.

These new forces reached the British Isles as ship after ship of Britain's "ferocious armada" came bursting through a storm of German shells and bombs, laden with fighting men evacuated from the Flanders "pocket."

British officials contended that a high percentage of the British Expeditionary Force has been delivered from the Nazi trap.

By Charles A. Smith
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

LONDON, June 1—Belief prevailed in certain London quarters today that Italian intervention in the European War may be preceded by a new mediation attempt on the part of Premier Mussolini.

In this attempt, it was predicted, Duce might offer the Anglo-French allies a peace plan on behalf of Chancellor Hitler.

Possibility also was seen that such a plan, if offered, might be accompanied by an ultimatum stating that unless the peace proposals are accepted Italy will be compelled to join Germany in war against Britain and France.

It was stated authoritatively, however, that the British Government is not the least bit disposed to consider such proposals, which obviously would be in the nature of "victory terms" designed to satisfy both Hitler and Mussolini.

The Allies, authorities declared, have been watching the Mediterranean situation calmly. It was added that they have gone far to meet the Italian "legitimate aspirations" both now and for the future.

But in view of the latest indications of Italian "intransigence," it was stated, it is now "obvious" that the actual choice for peace or war regarding Italy is out of Allied hands.

German Army Hardly Dented

By Pierre J. Huss

With the German Army in France, June 1—Despite the present comparative lull, Hitler's blitzkrieg will continue "until France's military might is shattered," high officers of the Nazi army declared today.

I write this dispatch from a point overlooking the Somme-Aisne battle region. There are visible no signs that the Reich's gigantic military machine is ready for a real breathing spell; on the contrary, everything points to a relentless determination to continue those thunderbolt tactics.

Nazi spokesmen insist that the German army is "scarcely dented" and is ready to tackle any combination of arms. The air force is held to be even more effective than before as it has reorganized itself at the expense of captured French and Belgian air ports.

Wherever the direction of the next big push will be, the Germans now are busy behind the front moving huge numbers of captured Allied troops in western Flanders and northwestern France to German prison camps.

"We've got one million men captured in Belgium and Holland," one well-informed military man asserted.

This may be an exaggeration, but there is no question that the Nazi catch was large. The so-called axis of the German victory runs from Valenciennes to Boulogne and Neuport on the channel.

Destroy 56 German Planes

LONDON, June 1—56 German aircraft were destroyed or seriously damaged off the northeastern coast of France, it was officially announced today. 16 British fighters were reported missing.

The dawn patrol of British fighting planes off Dunkerque today also shot down 10 German fighting planes with a loss of one British fighter, while British naval aircraft sank a German torpedo boat off the Belgium coast.

Hitler To Launch New Phase of War

Rome, June 1—Hitler and Mussolini have exchanged full information on their military plans through Italian Ambassador Alisieri, it was learned today as the Italian press predicted Hitler is about to launch a sensational new phase of the war.

Newspapers speculated on the possibility that the Germans may attempt to use Ireland as a base for attack against western England.

Whatever the nature of Hitler's next move, Italian sources expressed belief the first entailed synchronization and co-operation with Italian activities. Italy is steadily speeding her preparations.

The reception-dance tendered the juniors of Bristol high school by the seniors, last evening in the high school auditorium, was, according to the 400 attending, one of the finest affairs of its kind here in recent years.

One half of the hall was in the seniors' colors of orchid and yellow, and the other half in the junior tones of blue and white; while the walls were a blending of the four shades. ## THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT
"Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc."

Partial Atonement

Washington, May 30.

THE appointment by the President of Mr. J. J. Pierrepont Moffat as Minister to Canada is so good that it balances his previous appointment of Mr. James H. R. Cromwell to the same important post. It is hardly possible to praise it more highly than in saying that.

HOWEVER much Mr. Roosevelt may have merited criticism for his first selection he deserves equal praise for the second. It is completely non-political. It carries not even the suggestion of rewarding a large campaign contributor. It promotes a trained and experienced diplomat of high character and ability. It recognizes the right of the Dominion of Canada, particularly in so critical a period, to receive from us a really qualified representative.

AT CANTIGNY, 22 YEARS AGO

A paragraph from the news of twenty-two years ago says that American troops who captured the village of Cantigny withstood three determined counter-attacks and inflicted heavy losses on the enemy. Reports from France also said that the British and French were full of praise for the conduct of Pershing's men in their first important offensive operation.

This anniversary has not assumed distinguished significance in the minds of the American people up to the present time, nor, for that matter, is it a day that stands out particularly in the recollections of the veterans themselves. Eventually, however, it is certain to assume proper proportion in the historic perspective of succeeding generations of Americans, because Cantigny was a day of importance and of glory.

Until then, the American Army was an unknown quantity. At home its fighting qualities were assumed, and this was true, to a lesser extent insofar as the Allies were concerned. But they were not proved, and Germany was inclined to view scornfully the young soldiers who came from a land where there was only a minimum of emphasis upon military training and who had been hastily snatched from peaceful occupations to play a hand in the grim business of war.

Trained in the military tradition, having lived in an atmosphere charged constantly with grandiose talk of war, Germany, somewhat naturally, dismissed scornfully the mere thought that men could be transformed from civilians into soldiers within a brief period of months. The puddingheads soon learned their error.

It was Cantigny that dispelled all doubts. At this little village American troops demonstrated again that they have their own kind of spirit and courage and it is of just about the same high quality as it was at Valley Forge, at Shiloh, at Santiago. Cantigny brought hope to the Allies and despair to the barbaric hordes.

MONTH OF WEDDINGS

June is traditionally the favorite month for weddings. The poet said that in spring the young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love. Presumably by June his fancy has become so emotional that the word "lightly" no longer applies to it.

The cynical observer may say that all weddings are more or less alike, except of course that many of them are very ornate and beautiful spectacles. But whether such an event is a highly finished picture, or a very unpretentious affair for a few relatives and friends, it is a dramatic turning point in the history of one man and one woman.

Such an event, even the very simplest little wedding, is a climax of human experience, a kind of high mountain top of life, toward which the climbing paths have reached for many years, and where distant views into the more or less misty future are obtained.

What see these young couples, as they look out from that elevated position in their life history? Can they see fair skies ahead, bright skies ahead, bright sunshine, fruitful labors?

It is this mystery of the unknown future that throws its veil of romance over every such event. But, anyway, the world gives its best send-off to these young people about to start on their pilgrimage.

British fleet as a result of the capitulation of England and manning it with German sailors, the Nazis should cross the Atlantic and attempt to seize Canada. These notions may be—and it is to be hoped are—fantastic and without foundation. But some fantastic and frightful things have been happening in the world recently and no one will dispute that these have enormously increased the importance of the Canadian post.

—O—
THAT being the case, both Americans and Canadians have reason to be pleased that such a man as Mr. Moffat has been chosen to succeed such a man as Mr. Cromwell. That Cromwell appointment really was a sickening thing. It was offensive, of course, because it sent to our nearest neighbor and closest friend a man utterly without training, with an unsavory "play boy" reputation, whose sole qualification seemed to be that he contributed heavily to the President's campaign fund. But, in addition to that, the appointment was clearly made with the view of furthering the political arrangement between Mr. Cromwell, who aspires to be United States Senator from New Jersey, and Mr. Frank Hague, the notorious Democratic boss of that State. Mr. Cromwell, whose Fat Cat qualification leads Mr. Hague to refer to him as "the politician's dream," needed what the advertising gentlemen call a "build up." The Canadian post seemed just made to order for that purpose.

—O—
SO with the benediction of Mr. Hague, who previously had come out for a third term for Mr. Roosevelt, the President named Mr. Cromwell as Minister, with full knowledge of his political arrangement with Mr. Hague and of his intention to hold the position only until after he had been nominated for the Senate. The statement that the President had full knowledge of the political arrangement with Mr. Hague and co-operated in it is made advisedly. Because even if Mr. Cromwell had not personally apprised him of the facts, they had been printed and commented upon in practically every newspaper in the country. He could not have escaped the knowledge.

—O—
NOW, Mr. Cromwell has been nominated and New Jersey voters will decide in November whether or not they want him to succeed able Senator Warren Barbour. The odds are that a verdict against Mr. Cromwell will be rendered. That would be a blow to Mr. Cromwell and Mr. Hague, but not to the State or the nation. So far as the latter is concerned it would be better to have Mr. Cromwell represent his State in the Senate than his country in Canada. Neither defense nor explanation of Mr. Roosevelt's part in promoting Mr. Hague's sordid political plans through the appointment of Mr. Cromwell to Canada, and Mr. Edison (now the Hague candidate for Governor of New Jersey) as Secretary of the Navy, has ever been offered. The two constitute one of the least creditable chapters of the whole Administration. Fine as it is, the appointment of Mr. Moffat only partially atones.

Numerous awards, one of which will be the Marty Green Trophy, of Bristol, for marksmanship will be presented. There will also be awards for the best attendance, and other achievements, the names of the winners being held until that time.

Chief Welsh pointed out that the commencement will be unique because to the interest in Mr. Fisher, who served as the prosecuting counsel in the famed Hauptmann-Lindbergh trial which took place in Flemington, N. J., several years ago.

TITAN TOWER by JAMES G. CHESNUTT

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

Linda didn't know what time it was when she threw the covers back from the bed, covered her eyes with her hands—palms outward—as though to fend off a horrible vision, and then swiftly rose, slipped into mules and a robe, and went to Mickey's crib.

She stood there a long time, looking down on him without waking him, watching him sleep the deep, restful sleep of the very young.

"Mickey, dear," she said softly, "you'll understand some day."

And then she walked from the room, straight out through the front room and into the hall, leaving her door ajar behind her.

Jo Monroe was yawning and grumbling in alternate breaths when she opened the door of her apartment.

But Janice, who stood behind her, was more hospitable.

"Come right in, honey," Janice said, "what's the matter? Is something wrong?"

"Nothing," wrong, Jan," Linda said, throwing her arms about Janice. "Everything's right—now."

"Jo," Linda said, emphatically, turning to the tall girl, who stood, leaning with elbow on wall scratching her tousled head, "Jo! I'm going to do it!"

"Do you have to do it right NOW?" Jo yawned. "Why at 2 o'clock in the morning?"

"Do what, honey?" Janice asked as she climbed back into bed and Jo sat on the edge.

"I'm going to take Jo's advice," Linda said. "My mind's made up now—definitely. I've just decided. I'm a single woman and I'm going to act like one—I'm going to have fun like one!"

If Jo was not as tremendously moved by the announcement as Linda had expected, Janice was more so.

"O. K., Lin," Jo said, "I'm really glad that you've finally seen the light."

"I'm NOT!" It was Janice.

"I think it's terrible," Janice said. "Don't you do it, honey! Don't you be so foolish as to let him think you're single. If I loved a man, I'd tell him everything; no half measures. I'd . . ."

"But Jan dear," Jo interrupted. "You're so DIFFERENT. Lucky man that gets you—lucky you, if you get a man."

Linda went back to her own room and slept very soundly the few remaining hours until her alarm clock jangled her into consciousness again.

Her lack of sleep showed in the tired lines about her bloodshot eyes the next morning. The look was still there at noon when she again met Mr. Avon in the little sandwich shop. After they had talked awhile, on generalities, he said:

"Linda, the old shoulder's still here. Sure you don't want to use it? You look as though you'd better confide in someone, before you become another non-paying patient for your boss."

"You're sweet," Linda smiled gratefully, and Mr. Avon wondered as she said it why this same lovely girl could confide in an anonymous old man but would become all stiff and averted and frightened if she knew he was really J. R. Blaine, "Mr. Titan Tower," himself.

"But, really," Linda continued, "I don't need a shoulder to cry on—now, anyway. My problems's all solved. Do you mind if I tell you all about it?"

Mr. Avon didn't mind.

Linda told him everything. She told him about Mike and about Mickey; about Jo's formula for Linda's happiness, about the difficult dilemma it placed her in, about Janice's warning against her final decision. Linda told Mr. Avon the whole story—but she told it like a story, third person, without names.

When she had finished, Mr. Avon spoke without hesitation.

"If that course will bring her happiness, Linda, she should take it by all means. She has happiness coming to her; all she can get out of this tough old world. If she's sure she loves this young man, nothing should stand in the way . . ."

"But remember, child," he went on, "that line about 'it's fun to be fooled' wasn't written about men in love. Way back—a hundred years or so ago, when I was a kid in school—I learned a poem that's stuck with me pretty well all through life. You know it?"

"Oh, what a tangled web we weave 'When first we practice to deceive . . .'"

"Yes," said Linda. "I know it." She wished she didn't know it, later that afternoon in the office, when the couple kept running through her mind, incessantly set to the tune of a popular song. No matter how strongly she willed against it, the words kept cropping up in her mind.

The words were there when Bill Blaine telephoned. He asked if he might see her that night and Linda pleaded a prior engagement.

"Tomorrow then, Linda," Bill had urged. "I have to stop and ask myself if I'm a doctor or a disease, the way you avoid me."

"I won't any more, Bill," Linda answered. "Tomorrow then."

Linda was in a mood several shades darker when she opened the door of her apartment, later, to find her front room in turmoil, with two tangled forms—a big one and a very small one—wrestling on the floor, impeded by a huge mass of tawny fur, which leaped in and out of the tangle.

From the middle of the rug Steve Hubbard's face, what she could see of it, for Mickey's small arm flung across the nose and mouth, peered up at her.

As soon as he had dislodged the young stranger-like Steve grinned up at Linda and said:

"Howdy, stranger. Drag up a rinkside seat for the championship match. Right now Mighty Mickey has one fall on Strong-Arm Steve. Also, most Major, the referee. He's the panting one."

"Hello, mother," Mickey beamed. His face was flushed, happy. "We're fighting."

"So I see," Linda said, and she didn't smile.

"Must you be so rough?" she said. Major bounded up to her and tried to lick her hand. "AND, PLEASE take that big dog out of here."

When Steve was on his feet, trying futilely to smooth his ruffled hair, his grin was something to behold. When he and the dog had gone, Mickey stood there, in the middle of the rug utterly devastated, heart-broken.

"Mother," he said, "why did you make Steve go 'way? I like him and . . ."

His lower lip trembled, dangerously close to tears.

" . . . and dogs AREN'T bad!" Linda gathered him to her.

"No, dear," she said. "Mothers sometimes are . . ."

That night, when Linda, Janice and Jo got together to map out the start of the courtship campaign aimed at Dr. Bill Blaine, Linda's feeling had changed. In the place of genuine self-censure, which had been so difficult to subdue before she decided upon this course, there was that tingling feeling of intrigue's excitement.

"Himmm," said Jo standing back and surveying Linda through narrowed, critical eyes, hands on hips. "Lessee, not much needed in the way of makeup or costume for the part. But as for 'props'—ah, yes . . ."

Linda's gaze, sparkling interest in her eyes, followed the line of Jo's vision to the third finger of Linda's left hand. There was the beautiful combination engagement and wedding ring which Mike Morton had given her—eye-holding as an ornamental symbol. At least, Bill Blaine certainly hadn't recognized it as such.

"The ring doesn't fit the perfect picture of the eligible girl," Jo continued, "so we'll shed it. Many's the time I've never done it for love."

"A flicker of a shadow crossed Linda's brow, but didn't linger.

"Okeeh," Linda said. "They're off!"

But Janice gasped in dismay. "Linda!" she remonstrated. "That's terrible! I'd—NEVER take mine off."

"Wait till you get one ON, darling," Jo laughed. "Now, let's see about the stage setting. He can't come to get you at your apartment. Guess you'll have to move in here, for the pretense. We'll be three little girls from school . . ."

"We're Lin and Jan and Jo," she improvised.

"Three little girls in a row, 'So, yo-ho-ho and a bucket of . . .'" She stopped midway in a pirouette and dashed for the kitchen, returning a moment later with a bottle—tall, dark and with gilt foil cap.

"Linda," she panted, "I've been saving it for my own wedding, but I'm afraid it won't keep that long. Let's drink to happiness for little Linda!"

When they had finished, Janice's glass was hardly touched.

Before Linda left them, they had decided that Mrs. Blauer must be taken into their scheme, although Janice volunteered to switch places with Linda and to keep Mickey on the nights that Linda had dates.

As she was leaving for work the next morning, after Mrs. Blauer had arrived to keep Mickey for the day, Linda said:

"Bertha, a young man is calling for me tonight. I'm going to have him meet me in Jo and Janice's apartment, because—well, because I don't want him to know I'm married, just yet. Do you mind staying with Mickey?"

"Mind?" Mrs. Blauer echoed. "Do I ever mind keeping the darlin'! I'd like to keep him the rest of my life! But Linda . . ." she hesitated, and then resolved to speak frankly.

"Linda, dear," she said. "Do you think it's exactly right to keep a young man in the dark that way. I'm just a nosy old woman, but if he's not the kind of a man who would love our Mickey, he's good riddance, say I. You know, dear, the best laid plans of mice and men—well, you know what happens to them."

"Thanks, Bertha," Linda said. "I've thought it all out, and my mind's made up. I know you'll like him, too—when you know him."

" . . . She's a quiet little thing, and butter wouldn't melt in her mouth—but . . ." Oriole was saying, And Linda knew he was talking about Janice.

"Well, it looks as though she was doing all right for herself, despite her quiet ways," the starter continued. "What with that Blaine boy so crazy about her, although they both try to hide it."

"Sure, Blaine—the son of Old Man Blaine, himself. Well, Marberry—you know she's in the big insurance office on the nineteenth floor—certainly must have learned lots about insurance. Looks like she's going to marry a permanent annuity . . ."

But don't say that I told you . . ."

Linda said her check and left. This didn't seem to make sense. It was grotesque. Not little Janice of all people; not Jan. Why, she had told Jan over and over again that

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

Linda thought of Mrs. Blauer's reaction, as she stopped for a quick cup of coffee before going into the building for work. Both Mrs. Blauer and Janice had warned her against the deception she was about to practice. Jo had spurred her on. And Mr. Avon—strange what reliance she placed in the judgment of a virtual stranger—had told her to "go ahead if it would make her happy."

Linda was sipping her hot coffee when she heard a familiar sound. It was a sound familiar to every early coffee-drinker in the corner coffee shop. It was a birdlike, trilling whistle.

"Oh-oh," she said to herself, "Oriole's out again."

"Oriole Walters was the elevator starter at Titan Tower. He had another name, but no one seemed to know it. His virtuosity at whistling bird notes, which thrilled Oriole even more than it thrilled his involuntary audiences, was his trademark. It was only a part of his fame, however. The other part rested upon his reputation for being the vocal newspaper of Titan Tower. No event connected with the building was too unimportant to escape his note; none was too trivial to be unworthy of a special broadcast by Oriole Walters.

Oriole's diet was nearly as spectacular as his talents. Alphonse, the griddleman at the coffee shop, always had an eye—and ear—out for Oriole's matutinal call.

Oriole entered, sat beside Linda and ordered canned peaches, with the juice drained, and spread with honey.

"Peaches—under the drier; beesweet," Alphonse intoned, topping it off with a whistle blast that sounded like the Sunset Limited at a grade crossing.

Oriole didn't bat an eye. He was practically insult proof, although Al—and several of the customers—tried their best.

"Good morning," Oriole said pleasantly to Linda, and fell to chatting, while waiting for his order.

"You know," he said, "that little Hanson girl in Dr. Schwartz's office—the little blonde that married Ed, on the fourth elevator? Yes, Ed Warren. Oh dear, no she's not with Dr. Schwartz NOW. She's had a baby. My heart goes out for those two kids; what a fix they're in now—only one salary and a new baby. Well, they WILL do it . . ."

He babbled on, and Linda did her best to pay no attention without outright snubbing. She was succeeding rather well until Oriole got down to the third or fourth news item on his morning broadcast.

When Linda heard the words, "that little Marberry, the sweet thing, with the brown eyes," she was all attention.

" . . . She's a quiet little thing, and butter wouldn't melt in her mouth—but . . ." Oriole was saying, And Linda knew he was talking about Janice.

"Well, it looks as though she was doing all right for herself, despite her quiet ways," the starter continued. "What with that Blaine boy so crazy about her, although they both try to hide it."

"Sure, Blaine—the son of Old Man Blaine, himself. Well, Marberry—you know she's in the big insurance office on the nineteenth floor—certainly must have learned lots about insurance. Looks like she's going to marry a permanent annuity . . ."

But don't say that I told you . . ."

Linda said her check and left. This didn't seem to make sense. It was grotesque. Not little Janice of all people; not Jan. Why, she had told Jan over and over again that Bill Blaine was the man—and Janice hadn't said a word. Janice was true and fine and loyal. Janice wasn't the type to allow Linda to make a fool of herself that way. Must be only Oriole's idle, malicious gossip. Wait a minute!

Wasn't it Janice who had argued so strongly AGAINST Linda's move? Wasn't it Janice who had tried to dissuade Linda from going with Bill Blaine?

"If I loved a man," Linda could still hear Janice's word, " . . . no half measures."

Little Marberry on the nineteenth floor, Oriole had said. The nineteenth floor! Of course. "Dr. William Meredith Blaine, 1902-12." Wasn't THAT on the nineteenth floor, too?

Using special lighting effects, costumes, and incidental music the cast will do the play exactly as written, in the serious vein of the melodrama so popular in the 1800's. "The Drunkard," promises to be highly amusing, as the tale of the hero, Edward Middleton, who turns into the drunkard, unfolds. John R. Bleasdale, Jr., will play the title role, with Miss Virginia Scullin as the heroine.

GRAND THEATRE

Musical treatment in Walt Disney's second full-length feature production, "Pinocchio," in Technicolor which will have its showings at the Grand Theatre, Saturday and Sunday, is on a scale as elaborate as that which marked "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs."

Six songs are featured, each furthering the plot of the story.

The story concerns a kindly old woodcarver who creates a particularly engaging puppet, which he names Pinocchio. As he finishes painting a face on Pinocchio, he tries out the marionette to see how successful it is. He winds up his music boxes and, to the tinkling tones, he manipulates Pinocchio's strings so that the latter does a dance, as Geppetto sings a quaint song, "Little Woodenhead." Another song in this sequence is "Turn On the Old Music Box."

BRISTOL THEATRE

The recent phenomenal popularity of Gene Autry, singing cowboy, may be interpreted as one of the signs of the times. With world events growing more and more complex, people are inclined to seek the simple, homespun things for their relaxation, and pictures such as Autry's "Rancho Grande," which opened last night at the Bristol Theatre, are typical of this need for down-to-earth entertainment.

"Daughter of the Tong" is now at the Bristol, with "Dark Command" as the Sunday offering.

ON THE SCREENS

GRAND THEATRE

Musical treatment in Walt Disney's second full-length feature production, "Pinocchio," in Technicolor which will have its showings at the Grand Theatre, Saturday and Sunday, is on a scale as elaborate as that which marked "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs."

Six songs are featured, each furthering the plot of the story.

The story concerns a kindly old woodcarver who creates a particularly engaging puppet, which he names Pinocchio. As he finishes painting a face on Pinocchio, he tries out the marionette to see how successful it is. He winds up his music boxes and, to the tinkling tones, he manipulates Pinocchio's strings so that the latter does a dance, as Geppetto sings a quaint song, "Little Woodenhead." Another song in this sequence is "Turn On the Old Music Box."

BRISTOL THEATRE

The recent phenomenal popularity of Gene Autry, singing cowboy, may be interpreted as one of the signs of the times. With world events growing more and more complex, people are inclined to seek the simple, homespun things for their relaxation, and pictures such as Autry's "Rancho Grande," which opened last night at the Bristol Theatre, are typical of this need for down-to-earth entertainment.

"Daughter of the Tong" is now at the Bristol, with "Dark Command" as the Sunday offering.

12th the Gallia was struck by a floating mine as she lay off the English coast. An 18-foot hole was blown in the side of the ship, but the 12,500 tons of gasoline on board didn't explode. A little later another mine drifted nearby, but didn't touch them. Captain Olsen got his ship back to Port Arthur eventually, took on another explosive cargo, and again set sail last month.

100-MILE GRIND TO BE RUN AT LANGHORNE SPEEDWAY, JUNE 16

Three 10-Mile Heat Races Are Added To The Thrill-Card

NOW BOOKING ENTRIES

Hankinson Goes To Indianapolis To Get All the Talent He Can

LANGHORNE, June 1.—By popular demand after a five-year famine of century grinds, Promoter Ralph Hankinson will offer a feature 100-mile race at Langhorne Speedway on Sunday, June 16th, in his annual post-Indianapolis speed classic.

Mr. John Q. Public, who unrolls the bankroll to take in races at Langhorne, put it up to the Silver Fox promoter to give a distance race, and Hankinson doing the fans one better, has added three 10-mile heat races to the thrill-card to make it more than good measure.

In fact it has been figured out that there will be 175 miles of motor madness dished out on the big league speed bowl, June 16th. Hankinson, off to Indianapolis to get all the talent he can there for the June jamboree will attempt also to secure all the former Langhorne winners and eastern favorites for the coming races.

It has been half a decade since Kelly Pettito won a hundred mile event and set a new world record for the distance in a thrilling contest at the historic course, but in the bygone days, since back in 1930 when Wild Bill Cummings won the first Langhorne 100-miler, there have been some notable century classics and some noted winners.

In former Langhorne 100-milers the starters were selected by time trials only, but on June 16th after the time trials, the starting list will be determined by drivers who place in the three heats of 10 miles each and eligible drivers will have to earn their way through direct competition.

Not only will the coming race be the only 100-mile event to be held in the East this summer, but the program will evolve more miles of competition than any program slated on eastern circuits this season.

Sanctioned by the Triple-A, it will put Hankinson above the 1000 mark in races held since the start of his promotional career in 1910, and the third race of his 30th anniversary series.

FIFTH WARDERS EASILY DEFEAT 3RD WARD A. C.

Third Ward A. C. was no match for the Fifth Ward Sporting Club in their softball game last night as the Fifth Warders, led by the Pikers, 18-1. The game was played under protest by the Third Ward management.

While the Fifth Warders were having a dandy time with the three Third Ward hurlers, Percy Court, Warwick, and Jimmy Massilia, the Pikers had difficulty in solving the underhand slants of Gerome Quindo who limited them to six hits.

Leaders on the Third Ward assault were Cianciosi, Iannucci and Pica. The Warders put the game on ice in the fifth and sixth when they registered thirteen runs.

LAST DITCH RALLY BY CROYDON WINS THE GAME

A last-ditch rally by the Croydon Y. M. A. team fell short last night on Landreth's field as the St. Luke's aggregation beat the Y's, 3-1. The game was originally scheduled to be played at Croydon but finding the field too wet, the teams shifted their hostilities to Landreth's diamond.

With two away in the final inning, Rigby ran into trouble and for a time it appeared as if the Y. M. A. team would deadlock the score. Oppman, after having two strikes called on him, lined a long triple to left. Palumbo worked Rigby for a pass. On the hit and run play, McCue singled to right, Oppman coming in and Palumbo pulling up at third.

McCue did not wait until Rigby pitched the next ball and attempted to go to second and was put out. Rigby to Heftman. Manager Morgan disputed Umpire Roe's decision on the play, claiming that the St. Luke's hurler had balked.

The contest was a pitcher's battle between Rigby and "Herm" Piuma. Both fanned nine batters and Piuma allowed six hits to Rigby's seven. Piuma was tight with his passes, not allowing any while Rigby gave up a pair.

One bad inning was the cause of Piuma's defeat and he started the trouble himself. It all happened in the second. Kratz, the first batter laid down a bunt. Piuma fielded it and then fumbled, the runner reaching first. Foerster singled to right, Kratz going to third. Strickler struck out. Foerster went down to second and on a short throw to shortstop, Kratz was trapped off third.

But Oppman was too late in tossing the ball to Sallustio and the runner got back safely. Johnson singled, scoring Kratz. Rigby won his own game with a long two-bagger to right, scoring both Foerster and Johnson. Leigh hit to Oppman, who threw to Sallustio, getting Rigby. Bounds whiffed for the second time.
